Cabrito demolition project continues on track

Capt. Kristen Skopeck Public Affairs

Project officers for the Cabrito tank demolition told the Adjutant General for Louisiana all is progressing well and even a little ahead of schedule during a visit to the site June 4.

Major General Bennett C. Landreneau, who is responsible for the deployment and coordination of planning for more than 14,000 members of the Louisiana Army and Air National Guard, surveyed the progress and spoke with the troops.

"I think any time we can give soldiers the opportunity to train in their specialty it is a good thing," the general said. "For me, the most rewarding thing, without a doubt, is being able to go and visit troops when they are training. It's what keeps me energized."

Military engineers from the 225th Engineer Group of the Louisiana Army National Guard have been cutting and dismantling the tank since mid-April.

"We're a little ahead, which is where we want to be in case some unforeseen event like equipment failure halts our progress," said Capt. Paul Treadway, project officer in charge. "So far, though, the project has been going very smoothly."

The expeditionary story: everyone's responsibility

Lt. Col. Bryan A. Holt
AEF Center

LANGLEY AIR FORCE BASE, Va. (ACCNS) — What's the Air Force's Expeditionary Aerospace Force concept all about?

No matter where you are, knowing the EAF story is everyone's responsibility. Ask yourself a few simple questions: How is my basic AEF knowledge? Can I explain the EAF/AEF? If you can't answer these questions just remember that the EAF is the new way the Air Force does business, and don't forget "10-3-15."

As stated in the Air Force vision, the EAF consists of 10 Aerospace Expeditionary Forces, each capable of the full spectrum of aerospace operations and eligible to deploy once for three months in the 15-month AEF cycle. Included are 10 combat AEF lead wings, five lead mobility wings, and two permanently on-call aerospace expeditionary wings.

As part of the EAF concept, the Air Force is capable of providing rapidly responsive, tailored-to-need aerospace force capability, prepared and ready to conduct military operations across the full spectrum of conflict.

Yet, from time to time, there are stories of Air Force members who cannot explain the EAF concept and how it relates to them. Too, there are those who think if they can just hold out the EAF may go the way of management-by-objective or Quality Air Force. But, the EAF is here to stay.

Since the end of the Cold War, with one-third fewer people and two-thirds less overseas basing, the Air Force has deployed four times more frequently. The increased operational tempo has affected readiness, retention, recruitment and modernization. To put it simply, the Air Force couldn't continue to do business as it did in the past.

The EAF is the Air Force's solution. It's the vision for the 21st century, the recipe for how to organize, train, and equip to deploy forces. EAF also helps create a mindset and culture that embraces the unique characteristics of aerospace power — range, speed, flexibility and precision.

We've made tremendous strides in establishing the EAF, such as the development of "EAF Online" and the AEF Commanders' Playbook to help those deploying.

Test your AEF knowledge. Do you know which AEF you're in? Did you get enough notification last time you deployed? Do you know about the AEF Web-based tools?

Whether you're at home or at a deployed location, knowing the Air Force expeditionary story is everyone's responsibility.

Proper supervision essential to Lajes youth safety

Maj. Tracy Witcher
65th Services Squadron commander

Children are the future of America. Most of us have heard this before, and we, in the 65th Services Squadron, are dedicated to the care and development of the youth here at Lajes. But, parents still bear the biggest burden, supervising their children and their children's activities.

School will be out soon and many youth programs will be in full swing. With this in mind, I'd like to offer Lajes parents some guidelines to help them in ensuring the safety of their children.

Children six years and under should never be left alone in a vehicle. Children seven to nine years may be left unattended in a car for less than ten minutes, provided that an adult is within sight, the keys are removed, the weather is not hot and the car's parking brake is on. Baby-in-a-moving-vehicle jokes are only funny in Hollywood films.

Children who baby-sit for other families should be at least 12 years old, have attended the Red Cross Baby-sitting class and be Infant/Child CPR certified. Siblings 12 years and older can baby-sit anytime before 1 a.m. and after 5:30. Siblings can baby-sit for less than two hours if they are 11 years old and/or in the sixth grade.

Children eight years and under may attend Youth Center activities only if the child is enrolled in a planned, supervised program.

Children five and under must be attended at all times by an appropriate caregiver. Children six to nine years may travel unattended to and from school and while playing in approved playgrounds during daylight hours. Children can play unattended in child-play areas that are within sight of their residence. Parents must physically check on their children at least hourly when they are unattended. You never know ... you might find yourself invited to play.

Youth age 12 to 15 may be left unattended, but not overnight, and they must be checked on periodically by an adult. Youth age 16 to 17 may be left unattended while their sponsor is on short TDY or leave, as long as it does not exceed seven consecutive days. Adult supervision must be available to make periodic checks and provided with emergency telephone numbers, and knowledge of how to contact parents. The caregiver must have a power of attorney for all medical care. These measures are intended to protect children, by giving parents guidelines for some situations.

Parents will ensure dependents under 18 maintain quiet hours on base and in USFORAZ housing from 10 p.m.- 7:30 a.m., Monday thru Friday and 10 p.m.-9 a.m., on holidays and weekends.

Most of this is common sense, but we still need to be reminded regularly. Parents are the first, best, and most effective line of supervision for children. Please, take up the challenge of your responsibility and help us care for America's future.

Lajes nurse recalls career highlights

Tech. Sgt. Jose Ruiz
Public Affairs

There are many ways people can be drawn to a profession. Observing, reading and hearing about it are but a few examples.

But Lt. Col. Paul Bennett, 65th Medical Operations Squadron Medical Services Flight commander, is different from most folks. Bennett is a registered nurse who wasn't drawn to his profession through literature, conversation or even observation. For Bennett, his profession was in his blood.

"My dad and my mom were both registered nurses too," said the Manchester, England native, who immigrated with his family to the United States in the '50s. "They retired a few years ago, but my sister is also a registered nurse."

Far from the laid-back, quiet-type personality usually afforded someone in the nursing field, Bennett is as adventurously spirited as he is caring — characteristics which have taken him from military service as an enlisted soldier in Vietnam to duties as a United Nations observer in the sands of the Western Sahara.

"I came into the service with the Army back in January of 1968," Bennett recalled. "I started out in finance and accounting and later cross-trained into military police and military police investigations."

Bennett served two tours in Vietnam, where his duties included delivering pay and allowances to Special Forces troops stationed in combat zones. Though he was never injured during the tours, he said occasional mortar fire, sporadic gun fire and enemy attacks were frequent reminders of the hazards associated with serving in the region.

"When I was at Long Binh in Vietnam, we slept in bunkers," he recalled. "And there was a bunker just about a couple of kilometers down the brim wire where everyone was killed. It seems they were up late partying the night before. They probably got tired and fell asleep. The Viet-Cong cut through the brim wire, snuck in and killed them all before disappearing back into the night again."

After Vietnam and five years in the active Army, Bennett separated from the service and tried careers as an Army Reservist and civilian police officer. But it wasn't long before the nursing profession began drawing his interest.

Inspired by his family and his experiences as a police officer, Bennett ended his law enforcement career and entered a local college. He completed an associates degree in nursing, with a specialization in forensic psychiatry, and soon afterwards, found himself caring for psychiatric patients from the criminal world at Overbrook Hospital in New Jersey, one of the largest psychiatric facilities in the nation.

"We had some real bad boys there," he said, adding that because of the danger associated with caring for such patients, workers were prohibited from entering the psychiatric unit, unless they were accompanied by a full psychiatric staff, consisting of 10 people.

In 1982, after a nine-year absence from active military service, Bennett said a recruiting commercial sparked his interest enough to inspire a visit to his local recruiter.

"At that time, I only had my associate degree in nursing," he explained, "but I had two years experience. There were two areas in the Air Force Nurse Corps that you could come into without a bachelors degree, and psychiatry was one of them."

ant and under the Air Force's Institute of Technology went on to complete undergraduate and graduate degrees in nursing.

As both a nurse and a military officer, he began a new career that took him to newer adventures helping others around the world as a medical care provider.

During his 19-year Air Force career, Bennett has played key roles during various crises and operations, under both U.S. and international leadership.

After the 1996 bombing of the Khobar Towers in Saudi Arabia, Bennett deployed as part of a stress counseling team to help victims of the traumatic experience return to the routines of daily life.

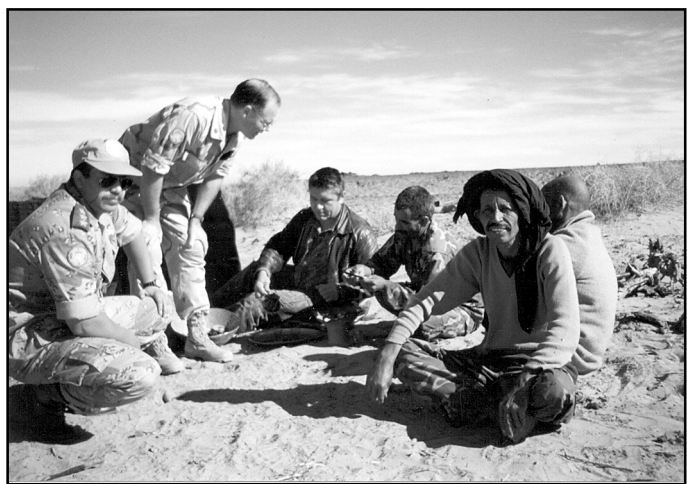

He also deployed twice as part of humanitarian relief teams to aide flood victims in Ohio and hurricane victims in Puerto Rico.

Bennett was NATO's chief medical planner for the Turkish area of operations as part of an allied assignment to Izmir, Turkey.

Under UN leadership, Bennett served as a military observer during a six-month deployment to Western Sahara, aimed at easing tensions between Morocco and the Polisarios — a regional, rebel faction.

"It's been a rewarding and fascinating career so far," Bennett said. "I've been blessed with so many opportunities to do so many different things, and I've come in contact with so many great people. I can't think of any other career that could've been as rewarding as this one."

Bennett's career shows no signs of slowing down. The colonel will assume command of the 65th MDOS on June 26.

Lajes horse riders to perform locally

Eduardo Lima
Public Affairs

For the first time in Lajes history, a group of American riders stationed here will participate in two local equestrian events in Angra, as members of a local Portuguese horse riding school.

The first event is an equestrian show that will take place at 9:30 p.m. Thursday, the first day of events of Terceira Island's 5th Annual Agricultural and Commercial Fair, which will run through June 17 in the fairgrounds of Vinha Brava, near Angra.

The second event, an equestrian parade, will occur June 29 as part of Sanjoaninas, the island's largest annual festival. Sanjoaninas, which usually attracts thousands of visitors to Terceira, will take place in Angra's main streets from June 22 to July 1.

The Americans, along with other Portuguese riders, will perform in the events as members of the local horse riding school "Quinta do Malhina," owned and managed by João Carlos Pamplona, a local, professional horseman and bullfighter.

According to Pamplona, American participation in the school was initially difficult due to the language barrier, but he added the problem was quickly overcome.

"The American riders have fully integrated into our school," he said. "We all get along well, and I'm glad to have them with us. The American students are considered members of this school and will always be invited by our school to participate in these types of events when they occur."

Robin Holmes, an office automation clerk with the 65th Medical Group's Veterinary Clinic, was the first American to join Pamplona's school. Holmes, who is licensed by the American Riders Instructors Association, is now involved with teaching the first stages of riding to the other Americans students at the school.

"We have been preparing for these events for three months now," she said. "Senhor Pamplona asked us if we wanted to participate, which we gladly accepted."

"I enjoy working with him," she said of Pamplona. "I can understand everything he tells me, and we have established an excellent relationship."

Another American enrolled in the school, Allison Ashby, 16, is very excited about participating in the events. "I have been practicing since August of 2000," Ashby said. "I'm looking forward to this. I know it's going to be fun."

"There will be lots of people watching," she added. "I really enjoy being a member of this school. It's different and fun because we are able to ride different horses."

According to Holmes, who has been horseback riding for 18 years, there are 14 Americans enrolled in the school. Eight of them will participate in the two events.

Holmes said she found out about the school through Senhor Pamplona's wife. "I went there and met the people," she said. "They were very nice. I decided to join the school and asked other Americans if they wanted to join the school too."

Holmes said anyone interested in joining the local horseback riding school can call her at 295-549-473.

engineers are scheduled to arrive at Lajes on Sunday and will hit the ground running.

"This training is really superb, because it is the first time these folks have worked with cutting shears or this type of heavy equipment," he said.

As engineers dismantle pieces of the tank, the scrap steel and concrete is placed in large piles on the periphery of the site.

"The local government has finally given us permission to remove the scrap steel and concrete rubble," Treadway said. "So, the Cabrito area will start looking much cleaner very soon, as the tremendous piles of debris start to disappear."

Representatives from the Regional Government of the Azores were waiting on the results of environmental tests done on soil and steel samples before giving approval to remove debris from the site.

"All the samples came back negative for contamination," said Treadway.

The captain said his team received some fundamental help in getting the project to its current point. "Many folks on the Joint Staff and at the Headquarters Azores Air Zone have been our voice and tremendous supporters for keeping this project on track," he said, "we will have everything completed by the middle of August."

General Landreneau said deployments overseas to do projects like the demolition here seem to be increasing.

"We have engineering soldiers in Germany doing missions, and we are doing a lot of missions in Central America," he said.

The general said his troops told him that what made Lajes different than a lot of places they have conducted annual training is the excellent support and accommodations.

"This is, by far, the easiest annual training I've been on," said Specialist Justin Tureau, a heavy equipment operator. "We are working under the best conditions we have ever experienced."

Sports Day: Competition, fun under the sun

More than 320 athletes and 500 spectators gathered to take part in Lajes Field's Sports Day May 30.

Events held during the day included soccer kick and basketball shooting competitions, a 5-km run, billiards, table tennis, an egg toss competition and a tug of war.

Lajes Field's Sports Day was sponsored and organized by the Chace Fitness Center.

"The day gives us a chance to promote fitness, fun and unit camaraderie," said Master Sgt. Joseph Shaw, the center's noncommissioned officer in charge. "The turn out was outstanding, considering the Lajes population. We couldn't have asked for better participation."

In addition to the individual event winners, three Lajes units also achieved victories during the day. The 65th Security Forces Squadron won the Small Unit Championship Award, while the 65th Civil Engineering Squadron won the award in the large unit category. The 65th Transportation Squadron received the Sportsmanship Award for qualities and conduct befitting a competitive unit.
